MISSOURI STATE CORN SHOW
The eighth annual Missouri State Corn show will be held during Farmers' week at the Agricultural college, Columbia, January 10-13, 1911. Everything is being done to make this the largest and best show ever held by the Missouri Corn Growers' association and should receive the support of every corn grower in the state. Among the new features this year is the division of the state into five sections, with a complete premium list in each section. Except in the Open to the State classes no one will be permitted to compete for prizes except those offered in the section in which he lives. This will relieve the necessity of farmers living in certain parts of the state having to compete with those of the more favored corn districts. It will provide for a wider distribution of premiums than heretofore and should add considerable interest to the show.

There are also three classes open to the state, two of which are for twenty-year samples—yellow and white corn—with a $130 manure spreader in each, offered by the International Harvester company. The total number of premiums offered is 274, which totals in value $2,175—the largest and best premium list ever offered at a corn show in Missouri.

Each sample of corn will be scored by an expert corn judge from the Agricultural college and the score sent to the exhibitor. All corn remains the property of the exhibitor. Everything is being done to make the show educational in the highest degree. Can we not expect your help?

Farmers' week at the Agricultural college, at which time the State Corn show is held, is the greatest gathering of farmers held in Missouri each year. It is a combined school and conference for farmers, held under the auspices of the State Board of agriculture and the Agricultural college. At this time eleven leading agricultural and live stock associations of the state hold their annual meetings, and every Missouri farmer, whether a member of any of these associations or not, is cordially invited to attend.

This year the College of agriculture will give the second annual short course in corn judging, live stock judging, farm management, dairy husbandry, horticulture and veterinary science during Farmers' week. Last year 600 farmers were enrolled in this short course. These courses will be given from nine in the morning until three in the afternoon. Instructors in the College of agriculture will, by demonstrations and actual experiments in the laboratories and class rooms of the college, give practical and definite information of modern agricultural practices. The evenings will be devoted to discussions of various farm problems by the nation's leading authorities in agriculture. The university extends to all a cordial invitation to attend Farmers' week and enjoy these good things.

Everyone who is interested in better corn is requested to write for a premium list of the State Corn show, which contains all rules and regulations concerning the show. If requested, corn score cards and a circular on the selection of corn for show will be sent.

For further information concerning the show address C. B. Hutchison, secretary, Columbia, Mo.
